Kids raise $513 for society

BY CPL. JESS LEVENS Chevron staff

The depot chapter of the Navy-Marine Corps Relief Society received a unique donation Nov. 3 from a group of La Jolla, Calif., children.

Eight kids ranging from 3 to 11 years old donated $513 to NMCRS after they threw a block party in their La Jolla neighborhood in late September.

"Normally, we get donations by check from service members," said Michael R. Brown, chapter director. "The donation from the children is unique and refreshing."

According to Brown, the kids' parents wanted to teach them about community involvement. The kids decided they wanted to "help the soldiers," as one little girl put it. They brainstormed with their parents and decided on a block party.

The party was free of charge with refreshments and an inflatable moon bouncer for the kids. The parents made sure the guests knew where the donations were going

The kids presented the check to Brown in a ceremony, and Brown gave everyone NMCRS lapel pins, which the kids wore right away.

"It's nice to know that parents are still teaching good values," said Cpl. Suzanne Garris, a Marine Band San Diego saxophonist and Service Company, Headquarters and Service Bn., NCO of the quarter. She assisted in the ceremony.

"It's great that local communities still show us support," she said.

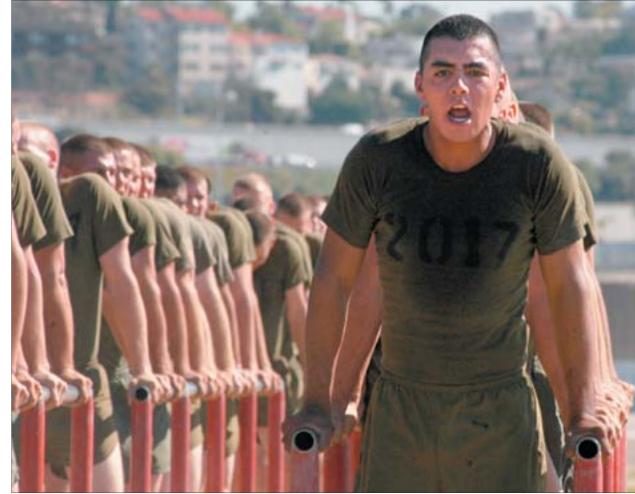

Brown said that while this is not the biggest donation, it is just as meaningful because of the work and heart behind it.

"It's always good when civilian, not military communities support the troops," he said. "We don't do much publicity outside the military, so donations like this just make you feel good."

Top recruiters honored

BY SGT. JIMMIE PERKINS
Marine Corps Recruiting Command

Marine Corps Recruiting Command recognized its top performers in recruiting for fiscal 2004 in two ceremonies at Marine Corps Base Ouantico, Va., Nov 2.

The 2004 Recruiter of the Year, Staff Noncommissioned Officer of the Year, Prior Service Recruiter of the Year, and Transitional Recruiter of the Year were recognized for their roles in ensuring MCRC accomplished its annual recruiting mission for the ninth consecutive year

"Recruiting is the toughest job outside of combat, and our recruiters are the reason we are successful on the battlefield," said Brig. Gen. Walter Gaskin, MCRC commanding general. "So today we must thank them for their contribution to the future success of our Corps."

The winners in the four categories were selected from finalists for each of MCRC's six recruiting districts. For Recruiter of the Year and Prior Service Recruiter of the Year, honors included meritorious promotions.

Marine wins at 29th Marine Corps Marathon

BY CPL. J. AGG Marine Corps Base Quantico, Va.

Veteran All-Marine runner Capt. Mary Kate Bailey recently became the first Marine to win the women's division of "The Peoples' Marathon" in Arlington, Va., since 1st Lt. Joanna Martin accomplished the feat in 1979. Retta Fevissa, a New York resident from Ethiopia, won the men's division.

Bailey, a Long Island, N.Y., native, family pulled away from her competition to run the final 12 miles of the 29th Annual Marine Corps Marathon unchallenged with a time of 2 hours, 48 minutes and 31 seconds. Lt. Cmdr. Kimberly Fagan, of San Diego, Calif., placed second at 2:51:17, and Suzanne Clemmer, of Gastonia, N.C., who won the Grandfather Mountain Marathon, Virginia Creeper Marathon and Charlotte Marathon earlier in 2004, finished

Fevissa, who finished in 2:25:35 to claim the overall win, exchanged the lead with Terrance Shea of Rochester, Mich., for the final two and a half miles before Shea dropped behind to finish second in 2:25:57. Christopher Juarez of San Antonio finished third in 2:26:

Bailey, whose three brothers, all Marine officers, were on hand to offer support during and after the race, said the memory of her father, also a Marine and Vietnam War veteran, helped to keep her motivated throughout the race.

"My father is buried at Arlington," said Bailey. "He was in the back of my

"The Marines out there are giving awesome support," said Bailey.

Bailey's older brother, Maj. Farrell Sullivan, a project officer for the Marine Corps Combat Development Command Concepts Branch here, said attending the marathon to support Bailey was extremely important for her

"We've been a tight family for a long time," said Sullivan. "Dad was a Marine and was hurt in Vietnam, [and] he was a huge inspiration for all of us. We have always wanted to do well for him. It's about doing good for the Marine Corps and our family."

Sullivan said his sister's success at this year's Marine Corps Marathon was also fueled by her personal dedication to being the best in every endeavor.

"She has the will and determination to succeed," said Sullivan. "It's the kind of determination you don't see in normal people. She is a very focused person who takes a lot of pride in what

Sullivan also said he could not have been more proud of his sister as the first representative of the Marine Corps to win the women's division of the race

"This is huge for the Marine Corps," said Sullivan. "My first thought was, 'Yeah, that's my sister.' I couldn't have been more emotionally touched if I had crossed the finish line myself. The amount of pride I felt was overwhelm-

"Not many people get to go aboard a nuclear attack sub, so this was actually a pretty cool experience," said Capt. Chad R. French, Support Bn. operations officer.

The Marines toured the navigation chamber, the torpedo room, the captain's chamber and the mess hall.

"Being on a submarine for six months at a time is something the sailors have to adjust to," said Bryant, referring to the cramped 400 feet that more than 130 sailors share.

Though Support Bn.'s Sgt. Francisco Martinez said he could never get used to sub life, he was pleased to make the visit.

"It was an outstanding opportunity for the Marines to be able to see something like that," said Martinez.

Military criminal law for Marines

LEGAL

he purpose of any system of criminal law is to define and minimize socially intolerable conduct. A crime is any social harm defined by law and made punishable by the government in a judicial proceeding in its own name. Because acts or omissions, by themselves, do not constitute criminality, it is necessary to inspect the consequences that occur as the result of criminal conduct. By the longstanding standards of American military justice, the accused's acts or omissions must impair a social

Basic to the American theory of justice is the principle that there can be no punishment for harmful conduct, unless some law in existence at the time of the act prohibited the conduct. Thus, some social harms are not crimes. In the military, conduct that is harmful to military society has been defined by Congress in its enactment of a federal statute, the Uniform Code of Military Justice. The President of the United States further defines these offenses by means of an executive order.

The needs of society ultimately determine what conduct will be outlawed. The military has long been recognized as a society that is separate and distinct from American civilian society.

Because of the factors differentiating military from civilian society, Congress is permitted to legislate with greater breadth and flexibility when prescribing rules for the former than when prescribing rules for the lat-

Take, for example, the First Amendment right to free speech. In the armed forces, some restrictions exist for reasons that have no counterpart in the civilian community. Disrespectful and contemptuous speech, and perhaps even advocacy of violent change, is tolerable in the civilian community, for it does not directly affect the capacity of the government to discharge its responsibilities unless it is both directed to inciting imminent lawless action and is likely to produce such action. In military life, however, other considerations must be weighed. The armed forces depend on a command structure that at times must commit and deploy men and women to combat zones, not only hazarding their lives, but also ultimately involving the security of the nation itself. Speech that is protected in the civil population may nonetheless undermine the effectiveness of instant obedience to orders or unhesitating response to command. If such speech is found to undermine unit efficiency, it is constitutionally unprotected.

Therefore, military needs for preparedness, security, discipline, and morale may require criminalization of conduct that is tolerated in civilian society. Military justice is a system of law that expects more of the individual in the context of a broader variety of relationships than one finds in civilian life. Therefore, military justice includes not only common law crimes (such as larceny and assault), but also purely military offenses (such as disrespect and unauthorized absence).

Through the elaborate system of military justice that Congress has provided to service members, and the consistency and rationality of commanders in applying that law, recruit-training facilities nationwide, and particularly our own depot, are able to produce the efficient and effective military organization the United States needs and demands for its defense.

Why Navajo?

The idea to use Navajo for secure communications came from Philip Johnston, the son of a missionary to the Navajos and one of the few non-Navajos who spoke their language fluently. Johnston, reared on the Navajo reservation, was a World War I veteran who knew of the military's search for a code that would withstand all attempts to decipher it. He also knew that Native American languages — notably Choctaw — had been used in World War I to encode messages.

Johnston believed Navajo answered the military requirement for an undecipherable code because Navajo is an unwritten language of extreme complexity. Its syntax and tonal qualities, not to mention dialects, make it unintelligible to anyone without extensive exposure and training. It has no alphabet or symbols, and is spoken only on the Navajo lands of the American South-

Creating a Code

Early in 1942, Johnston met with Maj. Gen. Clayton B. Vogel, the commanding general of Amphibious Corps, Pacific Fleet, and his staff to convince them of the Navajo language's value as code. Johnston staged tests under simulated combat conditions, demonstrating that Navajos could encode, transmit, and decode a three-line English message in 20 seconds. Convinced, Vogel recommended to the Commandant of the Marine Corps that the Marines recruit 200 Navajos.

In 1942, there were about 50,000 Navajo tribe members. As of 1945, about 540 Navajos served as Marines. Between 375 to 420 of those trained as code talkers; the rest served in other capacities. In May 1942, the first 29 Navajo recruits attended boot camp. Then, at Camp Pendleton, Calif., this first group created the Navajo code. They developed a dictionary and numerous words for military terms. The stories of "oorah's" origins range from the logical to the absurd, including stories such as it being Turkish for kill, which is in fact öldürmek, or even simply a direct counter against the Army's "hooah."

But where did the word really come from? Marines and historians have determined that the true origins of "oorah" lie with recon Marines stationed in Korea in 1953. During this time, Marines in the 1st Amphibious Reconnaissance Co. found themselves traveling via submarine to where they were needed The memorable call of "Dive! Dive!" would be called on the intercom and a klaxon alarm, which made a very distinct "aarugha" sound, would announce the descent of the sub.

The recon Marines, who heard this sound often, started using it as a motivational tool during runs and physical training. Over time, the word "aarugha" came to be too much of a mouthful, and eventually molded itself into the familiar "oorah," according to Maj. Gary Marte, a retired Marine.

Confirmation for this version of the story rests with the official Marine Corps Training Reference Manual on the history of Marine recon, titled "Aarugha;" the manual gives credence on the origination of the phrase with reconnaissance Marines.

"Oorah" is just one of the things that separates Marines from any other branch of service and has become a part of our lasting history.

"It is the traditions – the history – that makes Marines stand out," said Aulton Kohn, Parris Island Museum information receptionist. "The stories passed from drill instructor to recruit, and from Marine to Marine, add the color to the Corps."

The travelers arrived in Las Vegas by van at about 4 p.m. and checked into the Bourbon Street Hotel and Casino just off the strip. The Marines ate pizza for dinner and set off for the heart of Sin City.

Like a small melting pot, people from all walks lined the streets: bachelorette parties, Eastern European tour groups sporting Halloween costumes two days early, and a copper-painted man in a suit dancing the robot for tips.

The first stop was New York New York Hotel and Casino. The Marines settled in at $10 blackjack tables and made their wagers alongside chain-smoking widows with too much lipstick and drunken construction workers, losing what could have been a week's pay. But the Marines were disciplined. They soon left the gaming tables and ventured into the Nine Fine Irishmen Pub.

Inside the pub, a four-piece Celtic band rocked the crowd by putting an Irish spin on popular songs and oldies while Big Ray served the suds from behind the bar. In that pub, everyone could Riverdance, or they tried, and no one seemed to mind.

"The Irish pub was my favorite place we went," said Grieger. "Everyone was dancing and drinking and singing along. It was really cool."

The next night was a repeat of the last, but this time some of the Marines donned Halloween costumes. Grieger and Cpl. Erik Hetrick, depot Management Information Unit chief, dressed up like the Blues Brothers. Hetrick was Jake, and Grieger was Elwood. They finished pasting their homemade sideburns to each other's faces and hit the strip like celebrities on a red carpet. People smiled as they passed and made comments. A group of foreigners even stopped Hetrick and Grieger to take a photo.

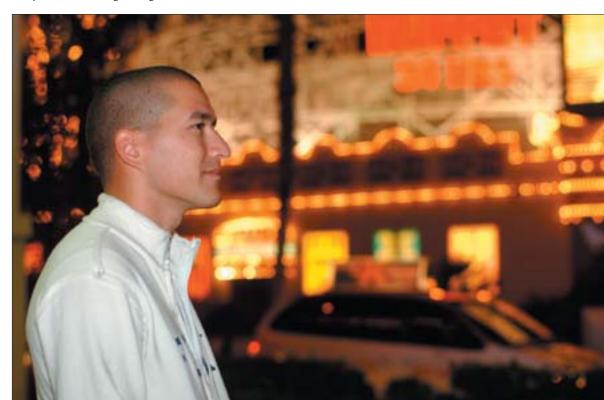

"I loved having people yell out, 'It's the Blues Brothers," said Grieger. "It felt like we were fa-

The Recruiter of the Year is Gunnery Sgt. Patrick Miller from Recruiting Substation St. Petersburg, Recruiting Station Orlando, 6th Marine Corps Recruiting District. Miller was selected for his ability to consistently exceed his mission during adverse times. Miller recruited in a region of central Florida devastated by two months of the worst hurricane season Florida had seen in more than 100 years. During those two months, Miller was still able to bring in nine of his 39

But as Marines do all over the world, we endured and did what we were supposed to do to get the job done," said the 27-year-old native of Corning, Ark. "I am here because I love being a Marine. When a recruiter gets up in the morning and puts on the uniform, enthusiasm is everything. The right attitude can help you succeed and overcome adversity."

The Sergeant Major of the Marine Corps, Sgt. Maj. John L. Estrada, represented the Commandant of the Marine Corps at the Commandant of the Marine at the much larger bases," said Master Corps Combined Awards Ceremony. He Gunnery Sgt. Preston E. Ford, MCRC was on hand to honor Miller along with top performing drill instructors, combat instructors, Marine security guards and career retention specialists.

"Outstanding job recruiters," said Estrada. "Without your leadership and outstanding efforts - along with the efforts of your fellow recruiters – we would not have the superior personnel within our ranks that we have, and even more so, we would not have a Marine Corps. It all begins with you."

This year marked the first time the top part of the Commandant of the Marine Corps Combined Awards ceremony. The Staff Sgt. Stennett Rey II from the 12th District. A competitive bodybuilder and Marine Corps martial arts instructor, Rey said his secret to successful recruiting is mindset.

"I am successful because I apply all the basics that they give us at Recruiters School along with maintaining a hard working attitude," said Rey, a native of Medals as well as other awards and gifts Queens, N.Y. In a separate ceremony, MCRC selected Gunnery Sgt. Sean Spatar, from RSS Hicksville, RS New York, 1st District, as SNCOIC of the Year. Spatar was selected for his talent, leadership and performance that led to his four-man RSS achieving 112 percent of its contracting mission and 117 percent of its shipping mission in fiscal 2004.

"My success is attributed to the good old-fashioned Marine Corps leadership traits from the fleet and the caliber of Marines working under me," said the MCRC also honored the top Transitional Recruiters of the Year, Gunnery Sgt. Timothy Donald, 2nd Transitional Recruiting Office, Beaufort, S.C. Donald faced the challenge of convincing Marines leaving the Corps to maintain a connection through the Selected Marine Corps Reserve.

"The reason we selected Gunnery Sgt. Donald was because he was able to perform in a small market like Beaufort and outperformed his counterparts working career recruiter specialist. "He also was able to retain a number of highly trained Marines from the aviation community which is valuable and important to the Donald came into the Marine Corps in 1983 and served four years before leaving to pursue his dream of playing professional football. However, an injury in college ended his football aspirations and brought him back into the fold of the Corps, which he realized he missed.

"I found when I got out of the Marine Prior Service Recruiter was honored as Corps that I missed the camaraderie and opportunities for leadership that the Marine Corps provided. So I came back Prior Service Recruiter of the Year is in and excelled," said Donald, a Jacksonville, Fla., native. "Now, when I talk to Marines, I share my experience with transitioning once before. Marines come through my door dead-set about getting out and leave with a more cautious approach to transitioning."

Friends and family came over to offer condolences for his family's loss, but he would have none of it. The 12-yearold boy locked himself in his room and

"I was quiet and listened to others," said Lance Cpl. Chukwuma F. Onyejiaka, Platoon 2022, Company G. "When my brother passed away, I changed. I started doing things the way I thought they should be done."

His older brother Leonard N. Onyejiaka, 14 years old at the time, was murdered with poison. It was all part of a family feud gone too far.

"He tried to take charge," Chukwuma said of his brother. "He led from the front and tried to solve the families

A younger 4-foot-6-inch tall brother was now trying to pick up where his older 6-foot tall brother left off.

They were close in age, and Leonard took his little brother places and built a brotherly bond. Chukwuma was different with his little brothers.

"I push my brothers away," he said. "So if something happens to me, they won't feel the same way (I did). I feel I should have been the one to die — not

His two younger brothers have a bond Chukwuma feels is similar to the one he had with his older brother.

"I tell them not to be so close (to each other)," said Chukwuma. "They thought I was just being mean." After living in Aba, Nigeria, for 12

Sgt. Maj. Kenneth Chase (Ret.)

PARADE REVIEWING OFFICER

Sergeant Major Kenneth Chase entered the Marine Corps in August, 1940 and completed recruit training Marine Corps Recruit Depot Parris Island South Carolina. Immediately following recruit training, he was sent into combat and saw action on Guadalcanal and New Britain during WWII.

Chase later served at the landing at Inchon and the historic withdrawal of the 1st Marine Division from the Chosin Reservoir in Korea. During these actions, he earned the Purple Heart medal for wounds sustained in actions against the enemy.

Chase also served in Vietnam, including an assignment as sergeant major with the 5th Marine Regiment during the Tet Offensive in the Republic of Vietnam

While serving in Vietnam, he received the Bronze Star medal with a combat "V" for his actions against enemy forces.

In addition to his overseas service in WWII, Korea and Vietnam, Chase also served tours of duty in Cuba, Okinawa, Hawaii and numerous other posts and stations throughout the continental United States. He also served as depot sergeant major for MCRD San Diego from July 1969 until his retirement in October 1970, after nearly 30 years on active duty.

In addition to Chase's Purple Heart and Bronze Star, his personal awards and decorations include the Meritorious Service Medal, Vietnamese Cross of Gallantry with bronze star, Combat Action ribbon, and the Presidential Unit Citation ribbon with two stars.

He currently resides in Santee, California with his wife, the former Joan McCaffrey. They have three children, five grand children, and two great grand children.

Depot empties sails in 2nd half

BY CPL. JESS LEVENS Chevron Staff

The Marine Corps Air Station Miramar basketball team outlasted the Marine Corps Recruit Depot San Diego hoopsters 81-67 in varsity play.

"They were able to beat us because they knocked down the big shots," said Depot shooting guard Staff Sgt. Jesse Bowman.

Miramar took off to a 35-22 halftime lead and rolled from there.

"We can win," urged Depot coach Gunnery Sgt. Ernest Seward during an early second-half timeout. "It's a new half; it's a new game. Get physical."

Depot occasionally found a spark but couldn't ignite. At one point in the second half, Depot climbed within five points, but Miramar hit a clutch shot and killed Depot's momentum. Fatigue also factored into the loss.

"We weren't as deep as they were," said Bowman. "They had a lot more players to fill in at positions, and our guys just got tired toward the end."

As time expired, Miramar drove the nail deep in the coffin when they hit two consecutive three-pointers. The 14-point loss was much steeper than Miramar's edging in their preseason scrimmage last month.

Depot's Seaman K. Moore drives in the second half against the core of Miramar's defense.
